“Challenge and Change in Medical Education: What Does the 21st Century Hold?”

M. Brownell Anderson, M.Ed

Senior Associate Vice President and Deputy Director
Division of Medical Education
Association of American Medical Colleges
Washington, DC

Overview

During the past 20 years, medical education has undergone substantial change and there is every indication that it will continue to change for the foreseeable future. What will those changes involve as we work to train professionals to meet health and social needs both locally and internationally? How do we educate health care practitioners with a patient-center approach to medical care; humanistic approach to medicine; an appreciation of the importance of the biological and population sciences for the advancement of medicine; an appreciation of the value of fundamental research for the advancement of medical science; and global perspective on contemporary health issues.

Learning Objectives

- Discuss the issues facing medical education at the beginning of the 21st century.
- Examine how medical schools are responding to the current challenges.
- Assess the opportunities and initiatives to support schools as they grapple with change.
- Recognize the importance of education as scholarship and the evidence to support education as scholarship.
